FOREWORD

The New Catalogus Catalogorum is one of the major projects of the University of Madras. It is a 20-volume programme giving details about the location of manuscripts, publications and studies regarding works in Sanskrit, Prakrit and Pali and their authors: it includes Buddhistic, Jain and Prakrit works and authors as well as those preserved in Tibetan and Chinese translations and those known only from quotations. It has received universal acclaim from scholars in the field and is being used for research work throughout the world.

Though started in the Department of Sanskrit of the University of Madras in 1935, its growth was slow and the first volume was published only in 1949. From 1966 onwards the work has been progressing steadily and with the publication of the present tenth volume the project has completed the first half of the programme.

This magnum opus has attracted international and national co-operation. The Rockefeller Foundation assisted it for some time and then the University Grants Commission gave financial assistance for 10 years during the Third and Fourth Plan period. The Government of Tamil Nadu has now taken over the financial commitment for completing the project.

I am deeply grateful to the Government of Tamil Nadu for encouraging this important research project. I hope that the programme of publication of the volumes will keep to the schedule, maintaining its high standard.

PREFACE

With the publication of Volume Ten of the New Catalogus Catalogorum this 20 volume project may be considered to have completed its first half. This present volume deals with Sanskrit and allied works and authors from Na to the end of Nvā. The general pattern of the previous volumes has been followed. Some of the new reference works used in the preparation of this Volume have been indicated.

Among the important entries described in this volume are the various authors with the names Nārāyaṇa, Nīlakaṇṭha and works whose titles start with Nyāya, belonging to various topics Nyāya, Mīmāṁsā and literature.

The plan followed in the New Catalogus Catalogorum is, generally speaking, the same as that of Aufrecht's work. "Among the changes and additions introduced, the most important is the inclusion of Buddhistic, Jain, Pāli and Prākṛt works and authors. All references under a title are arranged alphabetically. Under each work, reference is added to one or more important editions, if it is printed, as also to any valuable point of textual criticism that could be made. Under an author, besides his work together with a few important references, his date is, wherever possible, entered. References to critical notices of works and authors in research journals are added. Works and authors known through citations are also incorporated."

I am grateful to the Government of Tamilnadu for having taken over the financial commitment for the continuation of the New Catalogus Catalogorum project.

My thanks are also due to the Vice-Chancellor, Prof. G. R. Damodaran, for his Foreword.

I am thankful to the members of the Staff of the New Catalogus Catalogorum, past and present, for their devoted work and to the Rathnam Press for their co-operation.

नागार्जुन 15th Cent.

—Nāgārjunīyadharmas'āstra. db. TD. 18168.

Q.s Madanaratna and Skānda.

नागार्जुन Bud. philosopher founder of the Mādhyamika school; though very few works of his are available in Sanskrit, several works are preserved in Tibetan and Chinese translations. He is often confused with the later Tāntric writer in Tibetan traditions. Max Walleser, who analysed the conflicting traditional accounts, doubted the very existence of the Buddhist master (Life of Nāgārjuna from Tibetan and Chinese Sources, Asia Major, 1923); Winternitz on the other hand suggests that the Bud. philosopher, the Tāntric writer, the medical writer and the alchemist were four different men (HIL. II. 344n). Kumārajīva who introduced Nāgārjuna to China, and translated into Chinese several of his works in the 4th Cent. A.D. has written a legendary biography of Nāgārjuna (Taisho 2087). Nāgārjuna was born as a Brahmin in South India; with his knowledge in magic he led a life of lust and passion until he joined the Buddhist order. Hiuan-tsang mentions him as a contemporary of Aśvaghoṣa, and according to the Rājataraṅgiṇī, he was a contemporary of Kaniṣka. Tradition makes him a friend of the Sātavāhana king who built a monastery for him at Śrīparvata; this king is generally identified with Gautamīputra Sātakarṇī or king Hāla of Gāthāsaptaśatī fame; recent excavations at Nāgārjunakoṇḍa support Nāgārjuna's association with South India. He is said to have obtained the Prajñāpāramitāsūtras from a Nāga chief. He prob. flourished between the first and second centuries A.D. (150-250 according to Nakamura) and was the teacher of Āryadeva.

According to Kumārajīva's biography Nāgārjuna is the a. of (1) Upadeśa in 100,000 gāthās, (2) Buddhamārgālaṅkāra Śāstra in 5000 gāthās, (3) Mahākaruṇopāyaśāstra in 5000 gāthās, (4) Madhyamakaśāstra in 500 gāthās and (5) the Akutobhayaśāstra in 100,000 gāthās. The identity of these is not clear.

On Nāgārjuna see Max Walleser, Life of Nāgārjuna; Wint. HIL. II. 341-51; Etienne Lamotte, La Traite de la Grande Vertu de Sagesse de Nagarjuna, Vols. I. II. Louvain 1944, 1949; K. V. नाट्यशास्त्र ancient text on dramaturgy, dance, music etc. ascribed to sage Bharata.

Keith places it after the third century A.D.; but Manmohan Ghosh assigns it between 100 B.C. and 200 A.D. See 'Date of Bharata's Nāṭyas/āstra', J. of the Dept. of Letters XXV (1934) 1–52.

Mss. and edns. do not agree as to the number of verses in each chapter. K.M. ed. contains 37 chs., but GOS. ed. contains only 36. Tradition is in favour of assuming two textual recensions a longer and a shorter one; but Ramakrishna Kavi rejects this view. For a detailed analysis of the contents see Kane, Hist. of Skt. Poe. pp. 10 ff.

Many commentaries on the Nāṭyaśāstra are ref. to in literature; but the only ancient extant one is that of Abhinavagupta. Bhaṭṭalollaṭa, (S'rī) S'aṅkuka, (Bhaṭṭa) Udbhaṭa and Kīrtidhara are mentioned as early commentators on Nāṭyas'āstra by S'ārṅgadeva in his Saṅgītaratnākara: I. p. 19.
